

Stephen Marino, center, who coaches students on Adobe Photoshop Elements and other computer skills, talks techniques with Ken Sanger, right, an instructor of digital photography, during the recent SeniorNet Computer Training Program Open House at the Greenwich Senior Center. (Anne W. Semmes / for the Greenwich Citizen)

Hidden below the swirl of senior activities at the Greenwich Senior Center is a little known beehive of computer activity where dozens of skilled men and women are volunteering their time to teach computer skills to Greenwich citizens of all ages.

"It's one of the best kept secrets in the Town of Greenwich, " said instructor Gary Krause, at the annual Greenwich SeniorNet Computer Training Center Open House. "We teach 14 subjects on three different kinds of computer operating systems -- Apple, Windows XP and Windows 7/Vista."

The cost of the instruction is minimal and the benefits are boundless. For example, four Basic Introduction Courses of three to eight sessions, running 2 1/2 hours each, are on offer at SeniorNet at $30 to $50 a class. (Gift certificates are available for the holidays.)

www.GreenwichSeniorNet.community.officelive.com